

THE STRATFORD WAY 1969-70

DEDICATION

What did we ever do that we should have the meanest mothers in the world!

Take the matter of food. Who wants to eat breakfast, anyway? Our friends can sleep a half hour longer in the morning because they are not made to sit down and have orange juice, cereal, and toast. Some mornings you even make us eat eggs! You tell us it is important to eat a good breakfast if we are to be alert all morning. Our friends seem to manage to stay awake.

Lunch is another problem. Here again you make us eat what you call a "balanced" meal. Our friends get by on coke and candy bars!

Our mean mothers have never heard that child labour has been outlawed. We have to make beds, tidy our rooms, mow lawns, shovel snow and even wash dishes. We are ashamed to let our friends know how over-worked we are.

But the ultimate cruelty is in the matter of homework. You insist that we put in at least one hour every night on schoolwork. If we try to tell you that we do not have any (and sometimes that is true) you insist that we review previous work. Regardless of what show is on T.V. we must be in bed by ten o'clock. The next morning we hang our heads in shame when we hear our friends talking about the wonderful late, late show they had watched the night before.

Our mean mothers do not even trust us - their own children. We have to tell them where we are going; who is going with us, and what we shall be doing. To add insult to injury, these mean mothers aren't above checking up on us. Our friends come and go as they wish. Nobody ever checks up on them!

But, judging from our past experiences, we are afraid our cruel mothers are going to win the battle. We would never admit this, but sometimes we even suspect that your way might be the right way. And who knows, someday, when we in turn are called "mean" parents, we shall smile. In this case, we know that "mean" is only a synonym for "best."

We are happy, "Mom" to dedicate this Stratford Yearbook, 1969-1970, to the "meanest" mothers in the world.

Principal's Message

One of the most important needs of young people going out into the world from university and high school is discipline. We need to know about it because we simply cannot get along with other people without it. By the time we finish our formal education we have become persons, with status in a group entitling us to rights and imposing responsibilities.

Discipline is necessary for daily life in the family, not only for health and safety and tranquillity, but also to produce the habits of social behaviour which avoid perpetual quarrelling. Children must be taught certain fundamentals like respect for other people's property and rights, and esteem for others as individuals. Self-discipline means that we do not act according to our likes and dislikes but according to principles of right and wrong. Every parent knows that the natural tendency of children is to do what they like and to avoid doing what they do not like. The first problem of every parent is to teach his children to do the things they should do, whether they like them or not, and to avoid doing the things they should not do, even though they like to do them. Self-discipline gives us responsible freedom to move within an orbit as wide as is necessary to preserve the overall order on which survival and effective living depend.

The responsibility of family nurture is not one that can be passed on to other institutions. The school, the church, and various agencies have their proper functions, but no institution can fill the place in education and discipline that rightly belongs to the family. Love does not show itself primarily in the family in superficial action or in bubbling enthusiasm but in the calm feeling that here is a group of people, intimate from the child's babyhood, who feel pride in his success, sorrow at his failure and shame at his disgrace. One of the most potent agents in our development in the family is the mother to whom this yearbook is dedicated.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

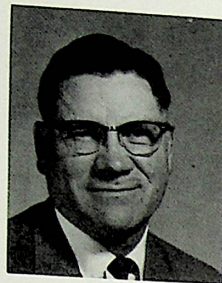

Although I feel that family life is very important in developing many aspects of your personality, I feel that school life is largely responsible for developing work habits, responsibility, and a sense of direction, which will be of great importance in one's future life.

I think that Stratford, because of its many facilities, its capable administration, is a very good place to acquire these traits. Despite the school's short history, it has developed into a very fine institution. For this reason, I am proud to have been a part of this school. At this time of year the senior students are looking back at the years they have spent at Stratford and I am sure they feel honored, as I do, to have attended Stratford. I hope that the future students of Stratford will keep up the high standard that has been made over the years.

Good-bye for now,
Tom Mayron
